Conjugating Latin verbs was nothing compared to trying to head off a bad case of the snickers when a transposed letter, word or mispelling puts a new "light" on a sentence or paragraph.

NOW-NOW-NOW

In view of the fact that the average American household for people under 35 has gone from 3.3 persons to 2.9 since 1960, this joke seems appropriate:

The divorcee recounted her problems and the psychiatrist assured her she had much to be thankful for despite her minor problems.

"But you don't understand," she protested. "I seem well adjusted but I'm really not. I guess I'm at a difficult age."

"Each age has its shortcomings, but also its compensations. What's wrong with your age?" the doctor asked.

"Well, to put it simply, doctor, I'm too young for Medicare and too old for men to care."

Cameron Woman Wins Top Award

A Cameron woman has been named as one of the top journalism teachers in the state at the 49th annual State Convention of the University Interscholastic League press conference in Austin last week.

She is Mrs. Martha Kahler, Temple High School journalism teacher for the past seven years. In addition to the Edith Fox King Distinguished Merit in Journalism Award presented to Mrs. Kahler, her students have earned high state and national honors.

Mrs. Kahler was one of six teachers in the state who received the league's top honor. The award is named for Mrs. King, who retired from education after teaching journalism in high schools and junior colleges in Texas for more than 30 years.

The award has been given for the past six years at the annual convention to recognize people for their contributions in upgrading scholastic journalism.

Mrs. Kahler took 13 of her students to the Austin convention and came back with two other awards.

"The Rambler," the Temple High School newspaper, was awarded the Distinguished Merit Award in competition with other Class 4-A student newspapers in the state, and a sophomore student photographer won first place honors in the Bicentennial Photo Story Contest.

On March 11-13, Mrs. Kahler took eight of her students to New York City for the 52nd annual Colombia Scholastic Press Association's Convention where "The Rambler" scored first place in the news division.

Besides conducting the yearbook and newspaper production classes and teaching Journalism I and II courses, Mrs. Kahler also works with the high school's creative writing club to put together the school's annual literary magazine, "Wildlife."

"It's the students," Mrs. Kahler said, in explaining all the honors. "They deserve all the credit. It's not unusual for publication students to be in the lab until 5:30 in the afternoon working on a 320-page yearbook and a paper that comes out once every three weeks."

Mrs. Kahler commutes to Temple each day from her home in Cameron, where her husband, James, has a wholesale nursery business. "I don't mind," she said, referring to the distance. "I enjoy the drive, just getting away. Besides, Temple has such an exciting school system."

Burglary Suspects Arrested

Two young men suspected of burglarizing the Seven-Eleven Store No. 1 in Cameron on March 18 were being arraigned before federal authorities Friday for post office breakins and charges are pending against them by Cameron police.

Police Chief Kent Butler said the two men, both about 19, also face charges of breakins at the post offices in Rogers and Heidenheimer on the same night as the Cameron robbery took place.

Butler said the two were arrested by Bell County sheriff's officers and part of the loot from the Seven-Eleven burglary was recovered. Taken from the store were 38 cartons of cigarettes, cigarette lighters, and a money order machine and money order blanks.

One of the suspects is from Dallas and the other from Nacogdoches, Butler said.

The police chief said he did not know yet if his office will charge the two or if the federal authorities will handle the charges.

City Taxes To Increase

LAMPASAS

The Lampasas city council scheduled an emergency meeting Thursday to begin formal discussion on a proposed budget. Under the proposal, taxes will be increased to $1.70 per $100 valuation compared to the current rate of $1.40 per $100 valuation. Other revenue increases are anticipated from a boost in curb and gutter fees, and increased swimming pool fees.

$2 Bill Returns To Money Scene After 10 Years

After a 10-year absence, $2 bills are returning as official currency. On April 13, in commemoration of Thomas Jefferson's birthday and in conjunction with the bicentennial year, the Federal Reserve System will make available at commercial banks a new series 1976 $2 Federal reserve note.

Like all $2 bills since 1918, the note features Mr. Jefferson on the face of the plate. The reverse plate, however, is completely new. It shows a vignette based on John Trumbull's famous post-Revolutionary War painting, "The Signing of the Declaration of Independence," capturing a bicentennial theme and tying in with Jefferson, author of the document.

Although issued in conjunction with the Bicentennial, the new $2 bill is seen as a permanent addition to currency in circulation. In announcing the reissue last November, Treasury Secretary William Simon said public acceptance would ensure the issue's success.

The Treasury withdrew $2 bills from circulation in 1966, largely because their relative scarcity dampened public acceptance. About 6 million $2 bills--only a third of 1 percent of the Nation's outstanding currency--were circulating in 1966.

By contrast, about 225 million notes will be available on April 13. And about 400 million notes--the projected average annual production--will be circulating by July 4.

The new $2 note is expected to reduce the huge volume of $1 notes in circulation, producing savings of about $30 million to the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve System over the next five years.

Castro's African Role Not Over

By Francois Raitberger

HAVANA

Reuter--Fidel Castro's recent talks with black African leaders and an international anti-apartheid meeting to be held here in the spring indicate that Cuba's role in southern Africa is not yet over.

The immediate objective agreed between the Cuban prime minister and President Agostinho Neto of Angola is to secure total withdrawal of South African troops from the Cunene Dam, in the far south of the former Portuguese colony.

But there is little doubt that for Dr. Castro, a long-time supporter of African liberation movements and the man who abolished racial discrimination in Cuba, the ultimate aim is black majority rule in the whole of southern Africa.

During a 25 day trip that began in Moscow and ended in Conakry, Guinea, the Cuban leader met representatives of nearly all the governments and movements directly involved in the African struggle for liberation.

The result was a warning to South Africa issued in Conakry after talks with President Sekou Toure of Guinea, Luis Cabral of Guinea Bissau--two countries with troops in Angola--and Dr. Neto.

South African troops, following military setbacks against Cuban-supported troops of Dr. Neto's Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) have withdrawn south to dig in around the strategic dam of Cunene, the main source of energy for Namibia (South West Africa.)

South Africa is believed to fear that the MPLA, when in control of the dam, would cut off electricity supply to the South African-controlled territory to the south.

Dr. Castro recalled that Dr. Neto had given assurances that he would not do so, and denied South Africa "any right to occupy one single inch of Angolan territory."

He also warned that continued occupation of Cunene might cause the war to flare up again, spread to Namibia and even to South Africa itself.

"If, as a consequence of continued occupation, black Africa sets up a multi-African army to settle accounts once and for all with apartheid, responsibility will fully fall on South Africa," he said.

To add weight to his warning, Dr. Castro, whose troops in Angola are reported to number over 10,000, said that "powerful revolutionary forces in the South of Angola were reinforcing their combat elements day by day."

The mini-summit in Conakry may be of crucial importance for southern Africa in the coming months, but the Cuban leader left outsiders in the dark about what exactly was said.

"The imperialists are worred and would like to know the details of our meeting," he told a rally at Conakry's stadium. "This is the business of the revolutionaries," he added with customary irony.

Very little is said here about the extent and evolution of Cuba's help to Angola. News media and officials use vague phrases and avoid mentioning any troop movements, Figures are top secret.

But there are indications that the airlift to Angola has been suspended. Unconfirmed reports circulating here say some troops have been relieved. But returning soldiers, if any, have received a most discreet welcome and there has been no offical ceremony for the dead and the wounded.

Million Jobs By '85...

We have often said Texas is to the 1970s what California was to the 1950s-60s.

And Harold K. Dudley, chairman of the Texas Employment Commission, predicts Texas will gain one million new jobs in the next 10 years.

He says preliminary trend projections suggest employment will exceed six million jobs by 1985.

This pattern occurred in post-war California in aircraft, electronic, and computer industries through the mid-60s when California ran out of sun-drenched, temperate coastline where perhaps 15 of the 20 millions there live.

Texas development will be broader because of a temperate climate, including rainfall and mean temperatures, in South, North Central, East, and Southeast Texas.

"Family Circle" magazine last year listed 49 good places to live and work and the first nine were Texas cities.

Other factors noted by Dudley show Texas is now third in states in population, leading over the past seven years by industrial development and maintaining the best business climate in the country.

Which says Texas has learned from the over-development of New York, California, the Northeast, and Great Lakes regions and has the space to absorb similar growth.

By 1985, it will be even more developed and yet capable of swallowing up people who "want to get away from it all."

It's a promising, challenging future.

The Patty Hearst Trial...

Patty Hearst, a member of the West Coast establishment in search of rebellion, found it in the Symbionese Liberation Army and lost a precedent-setting trial on charges of helping rob a bank.

Comparisons were made with the Lindberg kidnapping, the Chicago Seven and Scopes Monkey trials, but the Hearst trial seemed more another brake in the legal pendulum's swing back from itinerant rebellion.

If only half of what she decribed on the stand were true, it was a horrifying, though unforgettable experience for the heiress, who may have thought the Symbionese rebels were playing games from which she might at will extricate herself.

It was a test of psychological testimony which seemed less important to the jury than the fact pictures showed Miss Hearst in a bank, carrying a gun, that was robbed.

Defense was unable to prove she was forced to participate by one barbaric means or another. Testimony seemed to revolve around whose will predominated.

Miss Hearst is not the ordinary young woman. And a jury found her responsible for being in on a bank robbery, whether or not kidnapped, indoctrinated, and threatened.

All but one or two of her captors are dead. The jury accepted the case for the prosecution.

However complicated the case, the jury found "Patricia Campbell Hearst guilty" on all counts.

"Low Down" FROM THE Congressional Record

By JOE CRUMP

FLOOD OF PAPERWORK DROWNING AMERICANS

Senator Paul J. Fannin (Ariz.)". . .The American businessman (and farmer) is drowning in a sea of Federal paperwork. There is widespread public frustration over the growing tide of endless small print, multipage forms that must be studied, filled out and filed, raising the suspicion that Uncle Sam is really Big Brother who no longer trusts responsible citizens. . .

"The Congress has found it necessary to establish the Commission on Federal Paperwork, an independent body which is supposed to study the paperwork problem and recommend changes in Federal information policies and practices. . .

"The Commission on Federal Paperwork has given us an idea of how serious the paperwork problem really is, and I quote some of their statistics:"

Business with 50 employees or less complete approximately 75 to 80 types of forms.

A company with 40,000 employees maintains about 125 file drawers of records to meet Federal reporting requirements.

A big oil company files 409 reports to 45 different Federal agencies, excluding tax reports.

Another big oil company spends $17 million and uses 475 persons full time to file reports to the Federal government, excluding all tax reporting.

Each year the Federal government issues a 2-mile high stack of quarterly wage report forms.

Harvard University employs 26 people full time to complete paperwork at a cost of $300,000.

A typical small business with a gross under $30,000 is required to file 53 tax forms.

The State of Maryland refuses a $60,000 HEW gran for consumer edication program because the cost of completing forms would approximate 75 percent of the grant.

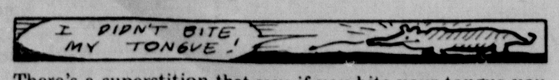
CRUMP'S GRASS ROOTS COMMENT

With the Federal Income Tax deadline fast approaching, most Americans will be faced with the Short Forms, the Long Forms, Schedule A & B, Schedule C, Schedule K, Schedule E & R, Ad nauseam.



There's a superstition that says if you bite your tongue you will tell a lie!

Freedom From...

Search And Seizure

By Alan Barth

Editor's Note: This is the 12th in a series of 18 articles written for the nation's Bicentennial and exploring themes of the American Issues Forum. In this article Alan Barth discusses the right to freedom from search and seizure and the threat to individual liberty posed by sophisticated bugging and electronic surveillance devices. A longtime editorial writer for the Washington Post, Barth is the author of several books on civil liberties.

Procedure sometimes seems dull; and one often hears procedural rules dismissed carelessly as "mere legal technicalities." Yet Justice Frankfurter did not exaggerate in saying that "the history of liberty has largely been the history of observance of procedural safeguards." Thus far we have looked at the development of three great substantive guarantees of the First Amendment--freedom to speak, to publish, to join hands for the advancement of common interests. The balance of the Bill of Rights, especially Amendments IV, V, and VI, is concerned largely with procedural rights of Americans, that is, with the ways in which government must behave in relation to its citizens.

This article will deal with one of the most complex of these limitations on governmental power, the Fourth Amendment. It guarantees "the right of people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures." It promises that no search warrants can be issued except "upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." Nothing is more important to freedom or to the exercise of other rights assured by the Constitution than to be secure against arbitrary arrest and imprisonment and against random invasion of one's privacy by nosy, power-hungry agents of government.

"REASONABLE" SEARCH AND SEIZURE

The Fourth Amendment, we should remember, forbids only "unreasonable" searches and seizures. Reasonableness is a disputed term but over the years the courts have defined its main characteristics.

First, a search, to be "reasonable," must have "probable cause" --something more than the searcher's mere guesswork or suspicion --to justify it. In short, there must be information, sworn to by some responsible person, sufficient to justify a reasonable man in believing that stolen property or the instruments of a crime or certain kinds of evidence may be found by an authorized search.

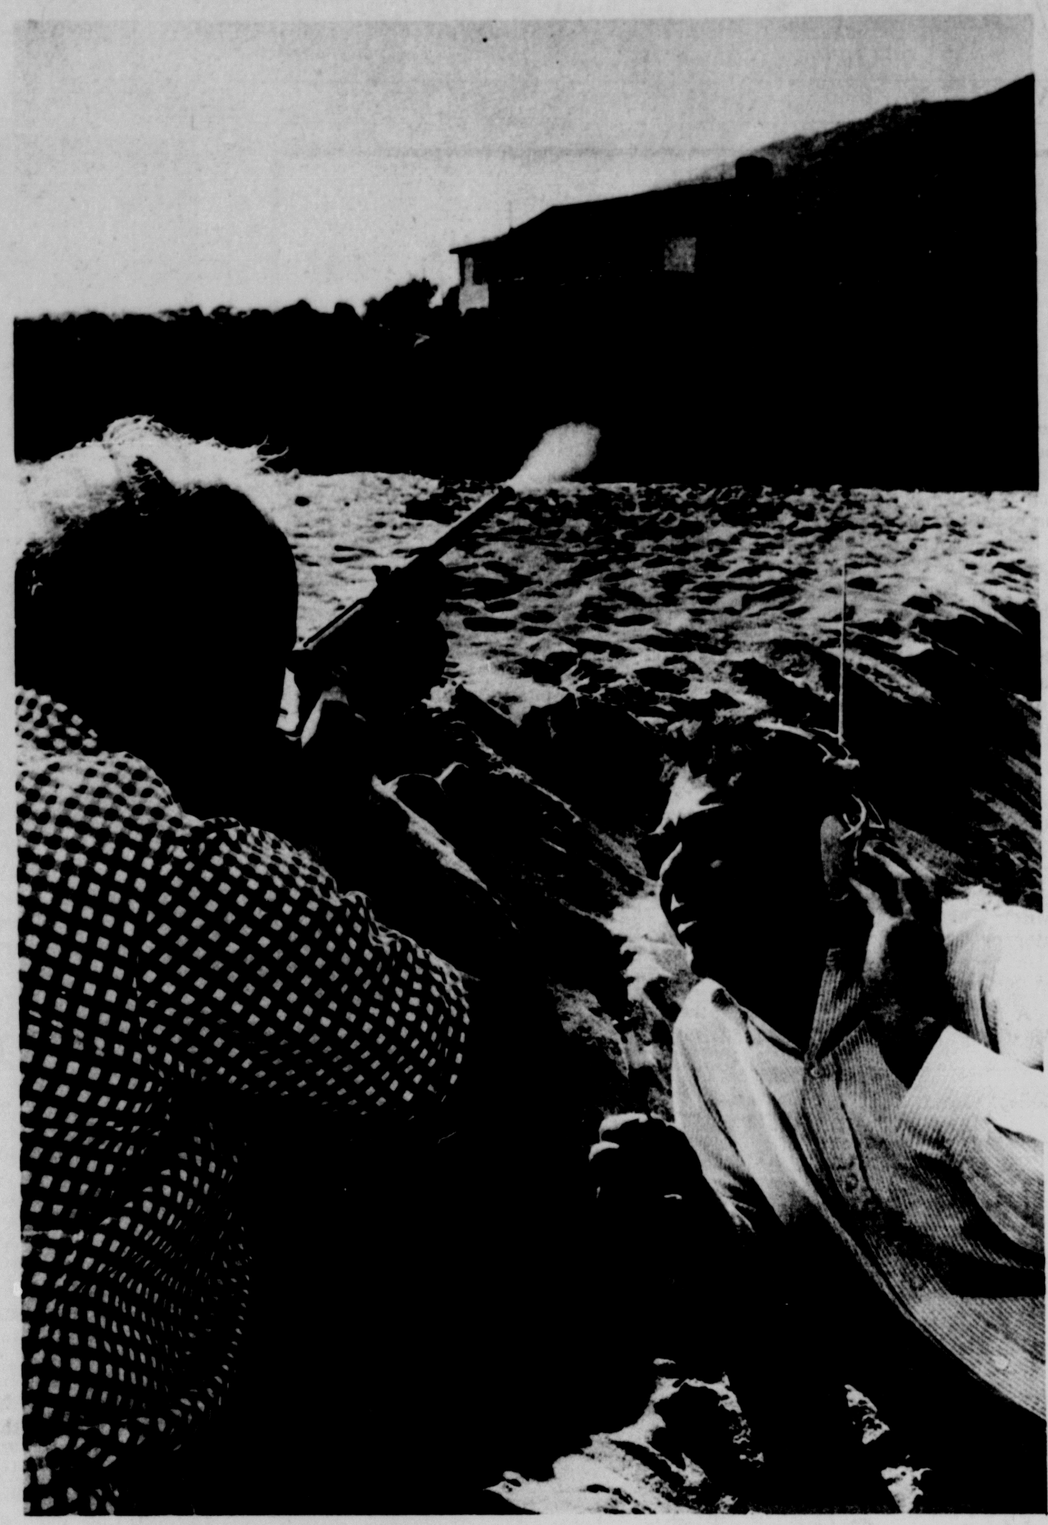
Second, to be reasonable, a search must be approved in advance (with rare exceptions) by a neutral judge.

And, third, to be reasonable, a search must be specific in regard to the place to be searched and the object to be sought. Rummaging and ransacking premises on "fishing expeditions" are not "reasonable."

The rules regarding arrest are a little looser. Arrests may be made without getting an arrest warrant in advance but only when the police have "probable cause" to charge someone with a particular crime. Then they must take the arrested person without unnecessary delay before a magistrate to determine the validity of the arrest. The Constituion, in brief, allows policemen to arrest but delegates to judicial authorities the decision to detain.

The development of the law governing search and seizure has been erratic. Long-standing common law tradition held that courts should ignore police practices in obtaining evidence so long as the police did not resort to physical coercion and so long as the evidence presented was competent and relevant.

In a landmark case decided in 1914, however, the Supreme Court ruled unanimously that in federal trials it would no longer accept evidence obtained through violation of the Constitution. The case (Weeks v. United States) involved the seizure of some papers in plain violation of the Fourth Amendment. "If letters and private documents can thus be seized and held and used in evidence against a citizen accused of an offense," the Court declared, the the citizen's "right to be secure against such searches and seizures is of no value, and, so far as those thus placed are concerned, might as well be stricken from the Constitution."



BUGGED DART, FIRED FROM RIFLE, WILL TRANSMIT PRIVATE CONVERSATIONS. Sophisticated eavesdropping devices pose a new threat to the right to privacy. Credit: Arthur Schatz/TIME-LIFE Picture Agency -

Note that was in a federal trial. As late as 1949 (in Wolf v. Colorado) the court ruled that the admission in state trials of evidence obtained by an unreasonable search and seizure was not in violation of the federal Constitution. Not until 1961 did the Court change its mind, as it does from time to time, and decide (in Mapp v. Ohio) that "all evidence obtained by searches and seizures in violation of the Constitution, is, by that same authority, inadmissible in a state court."

A CHIEF GRIEVANCE

The men who wrote the Fourth Amendment--the gist of which had already been embodied in a number of state constitutions--preceding the ratification of the federal Constitution, were no mere theorists. They were all too familiar with random searches and arbitrary arrests conducted under the authority of writs and assistance and general warrants by King George III's redcoats.

Indeed, these were among the chief grievances that led to the American rebellion. The idea that a man's home was his castle--that, however humble it might be, the king's men could not enter it without a proper warrant--was already firmly established in England. The colonists felt that they were entitled to the same right of privacy.

Privacy is nowhere mentioned in the Constitution under that term. At best it is an elusive and elastic concept, and just what degree of it the authors of the Constitution meant to assure has sparked much argument.

A great debate on the subject grew out of a landmark case (Olmstead v. United States) that came before the Supreme Court in 1928--the first case testing whether the tapping of a telephone constituted an "unreasonable search" in the sense forbidden by the Fourth Amendment. A gang of bootleggers had been selling liquor smuggled into the State of Washington in clear violation of the Volstead Act. Over a period of many months, federal prohibition agents tapped telephones in the homes and offices of the bootleggers and listened to them take orders for liquor and direct their far-flung enterprises. Stenographic notes of these conversations were used to convict the bootleggers. Did this constitute an unreasonable search?

The Court, dividing five to four, said No. "The (Fourth) Amendment," Chief Justice Taft wrote for the majority, "does not forbid what was done here. There was no searching. There was no seizure. The evidence was secured by the sense of hearing and that only. There was no entry of the houses or offices of the defendants." In short, since there was no trespass on the defendants' premises, there was no Fourth Amendment violation.

Freedom of communication between free citizens is the very essence of the democratic process. In 1967, therefore, the Court abandoned the "trespass" doctrine enunciated by Chief Justice Taft and declared instead that the Fourth Amendment protects people and not simply "areas" against unreasonable searches and seizures. Today wiretapping or bugging of private conversations is unconstitutional unless authorized and its limits defined in advance by a competent judicial authority. In 1968, Congress adopted legislation authorizing such electronic searches.

Law enforcement, of course, would be easier, and perhaps more efficient, if the police could arrest and interrogate suspects at will or if police could eavesdrop or conduct surprise searches whereever they supposed a crime was being plotted or contraband concealed. But these are the identifying characteristics of a police state. Where governments have such unregulated power, citizens are powerless.

In handcuffing the police to safeguard popular liberty, the authors of the Fourth Amendment realized that they were to some extent sacrificing efficiency for the sake of privacy. The price seemed to them well worth paying. It is, in fact, the inescapable price of liberty.

TJC Trustees Approve 5-Year Master Plan

Temple Junior College Board of Trustees voted unanimously last week to accept the college's five-year Master Plan, which had been presented in draft form for study and approval by President Marvin R. Felder at the board's February meeting.

The plan will call for additional classroom and administrative buildings, parking lots and other facilities required by the college's projected growth pattern over the next five years.

The plan is contingent "upon certain matters such as the increased enrollment we anticipate," explained Felder, who added that the plant represents "strategy for the future of Temple Junior College."

The plan will be sent to the state Coordinating Board for College and Universities for approval.

Felder reported to the board that the college had been approved for a $15,035 grant under Title VI, a federal program enabling schools to receive equipment for educational purposes. The program matches funds provided by the recipient college. The total project budget is $30,070.

Temple Junior College was granted the full amount requested, part of which is earmarked for purchasing an electric piano laboratory, he said.

Heitman Leads Yoemen To 4-2 Win Over Rockdale

Gerry Heitman made it two in a row against the Rockdale Tigers Thursday night in Rockdale by pitching a three hitter and driving in two runs to vault the Yoemen to a 4-2 win over the Tigers. Earlier in the season the Yoemen downed the Tiger 8-4.

Because of a wet field in Cameron, the Yoemen were forced to travel to Rockdale, where they had defeated them earlier.

In the opening inning Dennis Hollas stepped to the plate and flied out, followed by an interference call on the Tiger catcher on Donald Hanel. Hanel took first base and was brought in on a double by Joey Mondrik.

Joe Smitherman singled and was followed by another single by Gerr y Heitman. Heitman's single was also good for an RBI. Joe Reyes wa s the third out that retired the Yoemen.

In Rockdale's half, Martin Stroman struck out, followed by another strike out by Watson. Randy Morgan went to first on an error.

Cates was walked and Ray Cruz also got on because of an error when S. Hollas missed the third strike pitch and returned the ball to the mound. Cruz was safe at first base. Jack Thompson whalloped a hard-hit ball that brought in Morgan and Cates.

In the second inning Alan Jones led off for the Yoemen. Jones went to first on a hit pitch. Ronnie Orsag was called out, followed by D. Hollas who reached first on an error. Hanel got on because of an error, but Jones was called out on the bases. With two away, Mondrik singled and Smitherman grounded out to retire the Yoemen.

Until the fifth inning both pitching mounds continued to last the opponents batters. The Yoemen brought in the winning runs in the top of the fifth.

In the fifth, Mondrik opened the batting and was struck out. Smitherman singled, S. Hollas was safe on an error. Heitman blasted a hard hit single, driving in Smitherman. Another error cost the Tigers the fourth Yoemen score. Joe Reyes was able to reach first base, while Hollas rounded third and tagged the home plate to give the Yoemen a two run insurance mark.

Heitman is 5-1 on the year while the Yoemen stand 7-3. The Yoemen will travel to A&M Consolidated Tuesday.

TP&W Offers $1 - 25 Rewards

It's hard to believe anyone would turn down easy money. But each month Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and National Marine Fisheries Service personnel tag some 250 trout, redfish, and drum which carry rewards of from $1 to $25 for return of tags.

Less than three percent of the tags are being returned and P&WD biologists believe fishermen along the Texas coast do not realize the tags are worth money and that information from such returns is invaluable to biologists.

Tags used in marking the popular bag fish are visible only as two inches of round spaghetti-shaped yellow plastic protruding from the fish's stomach. Some fishermen have been known to throw away tagged fish because they thought a yellow worm was attached.

The tag is anchored in the abdominal cavity by a propeller-shaped crosspiece.

Some Gulf fish such as kingfish, Spanish mackerel, and jackfish also are being tagged by NMFS personnel. These tags are inserted into the flesh near the anal fin. They also have a short piece of plastic protruding.

Either tag carries a reward to the fisherman who returns it to Parks and Wildlife Department personnel or the National Marine Fisheries Laboratory in Port Aransas.

A certain percentage of each 100 tags is worth $25, some $10, some $5 with the remainder worth $1.

Tag returns help biologists learn more about growth rates, migration patterns, daily movement, and harvest rates. When a tag is returned they need to know length of the fish, weight, where caught, and when caught.

One black drum recently recovered in the Upper Laguna Madre was tagged in July 1968. The fish had gained only seven pounds in eight years, less than expected for black drum.

A few years ago a redfish was recovered which had carried a tag for 12 years. It gained 40 pounds during freedom between catches.

New Anti-Cancer Drugs Offer Hope To Victims

Several new anti-cancer drugs, often used with vaccine-like substances designed to help the body fight off the disease, are providing improved results in controlling cancer, a Houston physician told a U. S. Senate subcomvttee this week.

Dr. Jordan U. Gutterman of The University of Texas M. D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute reviewed recent progress in cancer therapy for the Senate Subcommittee of Labor-HEW Appropriations.

During his testimony, Dr. Gutterman outlined treatment advances for cancers of the breast, bone, colon, lung and rectum, leukemia, and melanoma, among others.

Use of chemotherapy, or anti-cancer drugs, and immunotherapy is providing among the most significant progress in treating cancer in recent years, he said.

Although he observed that much of this work "is too new to talk about in terms of long-term remissions and possible cures," Dr. Gutterman expects the results "to get even better with time and more patients."

Based on reports from many cancer centers, including M. D. Anderson, he reviewed progress in controlling several types of cancer with drugs and immunological agents.

Some cancer centers, for example, are achieving remission rates of up to 70 percent for breast cancer patients with the use of Adriamycin , and anti-cancer drug introduced about two years ago, Dr. Gutterman said.

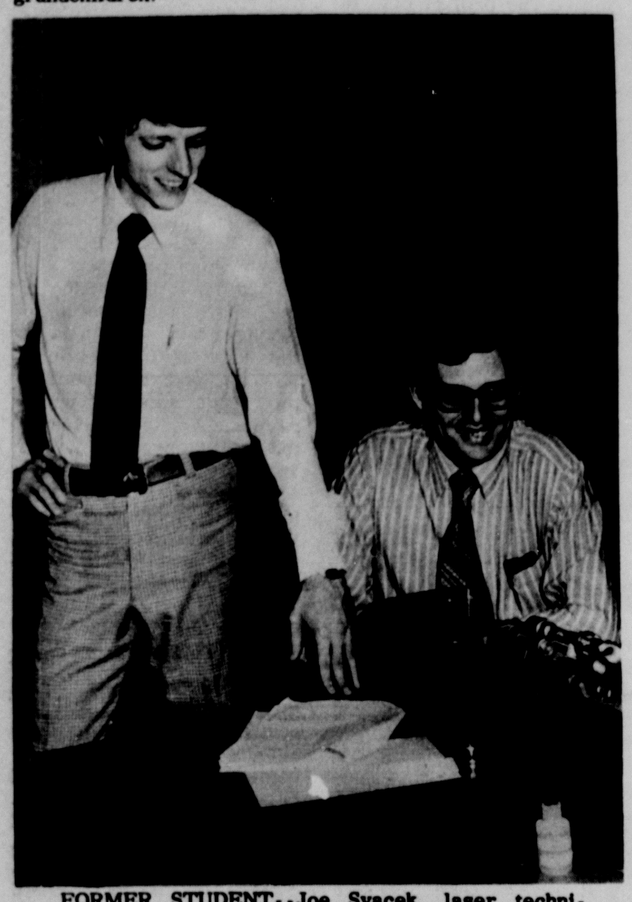
By administering a three-drug combination, the remission rate for one group of breast cancer patients at M. D. Anderson has reached 75 percent, he said.

Another cancer drug, 5-Fluorouracil, combined with an immunotherapy agent known as BCG has shown initial excellent results among a small group of colon and rectal cancer patients at M. D. Anderson. Some 22 months after treatment began, 84 percent of these patients still show no sign of the cancer reappearing, Dr. Gutterman said.

He also revealed that reports from several cancer centers have indicated a "two-fold improvement in the disease-free interval and survival" of persons with malignant melanoma following treatment with BCG.

While Dr. Gutterman, an Anderson associate professor of medicine, explained several advances in the use of drugs or immunotherapy alone, he said that the largest increases in remissions and long-term survival probably will somewhere both types of treatment are used together.

Dr. Gutterman was the only U. S. cancer specialist to testify before the subcommittee regarding appropriations for the National Cancer Institute, which supports much of the cancer research under way in the United States today.



FORMER STUDENT--Joe Svacek, laser technician for Bell Telephone at Murry Hill, N.J., returned to the Waco campus of Texas State Technical Institute for an informal discussion

TSTI Students Hear Graduate

Students in laser technology at Texas State Technical Institute Friday had the opportunity to hear what it's like in the working world from one of the first graduates of the program.

Joe Svacek, laser technician for Bell Telephone at Murry Hill, N. J., told students demand for technicians in all fields is growing each year, and with the advent of lasers in technology their future appears promising.

Svacek, 29, graduated from State Tech in 1967 with one of the first degrees offered in laser technology. He immediately went to work for Bell developing lasers for future telephone transmission. Ultimately, Svacek said, laser "fibers" will replace traditional telephone wires in transmitting telephone calls, using only a fraction of the space required for telephone poles and lines.

Bell is creating a laser wire, composed of seven internal fibers, that will be capable of handling every call made by seven million people--roughly equivalent to the population of New York City.

Laser fibers will preclude tapping of private lines, Svacek said, because a break in the circuit will halt transmission.

Svacek told students technicians with degrees from two-year programs like the one at State Tech are being placed in positions equally with graduates of four-year programs.

A native of Seminole, Svacek attended The University of Texas two years before enrolling in State Tech.

Students graduating from laser technology a t State Tech have an advantage in getting hired, Svacek said, due to the hands-on type of instruction--learning while doing, as opposed to studying theory.

Babysitters Required To Register

Babysitters who offer regular child care in their homes are required by a new state law to meet minimum standards and register with the State Department of Public Welfare (DPW).

The registration portion of the Child Care Licensing Act, which went into effect January 1, is actually more lenient than the previous law which required babysitters to be licensed and to submit to quarterly inspections. Registration differs from licensing in that it allows child care providers to certify themselves.

Under the new provisions, persons who care for up to six children, not including their own, are responsible for contacting a DPW licensing representative and requesting registration forms and copies of the minimum standards. These standards require health and fire inspections, immunizations for the children, and a health card for the operator.

Civil as well as criminal penalties can be assessed for failture to register.

For information on the registration process, contact Phyllis Osborne, State Department of Public Welfare, Rockdale

Space For Shelves Lurks In Closets

Are you searching for more shelving space? Look high and low in those clothes closets. A surprising amount of space for open shelves or pull drawers often can be found.

Hanging dresses and robes all on one side will leave space on the other above the floor for a couple of shelves, to store folded apparel or shoes.
